Resident of the Sky, Mundane Taxes Forgotten by Hoxsey

Now that Arch Hoxsey is forging to the front among the aviators of the nation and, in carrying expresidents around in his biplane, is directing attention toward himself, County Treasurer John A. Groesbeck is wondering how he can divert the aerial thoughts of the young man long enough to interest him in some back taxes in Salt Lake county amounting to about $75.

Salt Lake county amounting to about $755.

For, until about three years ago, Arch Hoxsey was a resident of Salt Lake, and was fairly well known here for the year he made this his home. Hoxsey came to Salt Lake from the coast and took the management of the old Utahna park rofler skating rink, on the ground now occupied by the Boston block at Main street and Exchange place. Only four years ago there was something of a park there, with a circular dancing pavilion which was converted into a skating rink.

When Samuel Newhouse purchased this ground, and most of the rest of that block, with other pieces in that neighborhood, the Utahna rink was closed, and Hoxsey opened another skating rink on Postoffice place, where later an automobile garage was established, and where a printing plant is now doing business. And it was while Hoxsey was running the skating rink on Postoffice place that his prop-

Hoxsey was fairly well known in Salt Lake. He drove automobiles at times in speed contests, and exhibited a streak of dare-devil driving which was not equaled. He was afflicted with the "aviation bug" while in Salt Lake, and left for his home in Pasadena, where he started to build an airship. The airship was something of a success, and something of a failure, but Hoxsey determined to stick with it. He received more financial backing and continued his work, until he perfected his mamore financial backing and continued his work, until he perfected his machine and started for the front of aviation men in the United States. Now he is one of the best known in the country, and as a result of his achievements at St. Louis in the meet now in progress, will receive more recognition among the flying men of the nation. Friends in Salt Lake are watching his career with interest, and predict a wonderful record in the future for the young man who knows no fear and who is a tireless worker in striving for imis a tireless worker in striving for im-provements in the aviation equipment of the present day.
